GEN. BURNSIDE ARRIVES AT LEXINGTON.

Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.

LEXINGTON, Ky., April 2, 1863.

Gen. George B. Burnside and Staff returned from the front last night, having crossed the Ohio river.

Langstroth, his adjutant, and his adjutant general, were with him. He is extremely anxious to get into the field, and is anxious to command the Polish division, which he has been offered.

The Polish division is to be commanded by Gen. George B. Burnside, and the rebels will be greatly annoyed by the command of a commander determined to end the war, and a commander only anxious not to have the rebels end it.

The rebels will see an eminent and accurate prophet in the appointment of the highly educated officers and soldiers.

In this war to positions under the command of the Copperheads, the rebels will have a poor chance for sympathy and conciliation with the veterans who have seen the rebels in the field and know they must be put down with steel and lead.

Elsewhere we give the Presidential Proclamation for a day of National Fasting.

The Wisconsin Legislature has survived all the other legislative sessions in the Northwest, has adjourned. Elsewhere we give its closing session and a review of what it has accomplished.

On the front page we give an interesting sketch from our war correspondent of the recent events in Port Hudson.

THE POLISH ENGINEERS.

The Polish engineers have begun to issue with interesting details of the leading features of the revolution in Central Europe.

The formidable revolution in Poland has passed from a simple revolt, a transient emanation of discontent, and has assumed the dimensions of a national movement.

The Polish army is now organized, but determined to recover its independence.

American rebels will best understand a reference to the territory and people involved in this struggle by a comparison with the war of independence in Poland.

The war of independence in Poland is a terrible one, with its long and bloody struggle.
